

Oughterard's Paul Walsh in a race for possession with Tadhg Morley of Templenoe during Saturday's All-Ireland club intermediate football semi-final in Kilmallock.

PHOTO: JOE O'SHAUGHNESSY.

their work-rate, the title holders comfortably held Nemo at arm's length in Ennis.

Corofin's magnificent exploits are not down to the quality in their ranks alone. They are the best prepared and most professional club outfit in the country, while their ambition remains undiluted despite all that they have won. There are no indications either that going for a historic three-in-a-row will spook them, but these players are human and it's Kerry champions who had four inter-county players, Adrian Spillane, Tadhg Morley, Gavin Crowley and Killian Spillane, in their ranks.

Ultimately, a softly conceded but well taken goal from former Galway minor Paul Walsh proved the decisive score of a compelling encounter. Oughterard had heroes all over the field, including goalkeeper Jordan Waller, but Ronan Molloy really covered himself in glory as they set up an intriguing